Jean Nienkamp

Internal rhetoric is my term for the way that we persuade ourselves-talking ourselves into or out of things, arguing with ourselves, berating ourselves. . Use of this site is subject to.

Thomas Rickert

It seems paradoxical, however, to those in the Western tradition who follow Plato in distinguishing the art of rhetoric from the art of philosophy or thought. It is obvious in that it is used in reference to the study of persuasive techniques we use on ourselves. She explains that just because we see ourselves as divided, as torn in different directions by conflicting desires, duties, and social mores, it.

JEAN NIENKAMP, Internal Rhetorics: Toward a History and Theory of Self

Nienkamp shows how we talk to ourselves, or more specifically, how we talk ourselves into things: justifications, actions, opinions, theories.
